HISTORY

Theatre of war

Rolls of film discovered on top of a trash can in south-eastern France in 1999 by teenager Olivier Rempher, were later verified by his photographer father, Alain Rempher, to be authentic photographs taken in and around Oflag VII-A Murnau.

This German prisoner-of-war camp for Polish Army officers during World War II was located near the Bavarian town of Murnau am Staffelsee at the foot of the Alps. These unexpected images will be displayed at the exhibition and include drama and puppetry in the Officerslager, the camp's liberation by the US 12th Armoured Division in April 1945 and a bombed-out Munich. On June 2-12 in the Lower Gallery, Polish Heritage Trust Museum, 125 Elliot St, Howick. Open hours: Tuesday-Friday 10am-4pm & Sunday 12pm-5pm. Casual museum entry is by donation and small

Artist paints Mangemangeroa

By ZOE GARDEN

An east Auckland artist has brought the Chorus cabinet on Union Road to life with the stroke of her brush.

Graphic designer and illustrator Kate Hindson completed a diploma of visual arts at MIT. Afterwards, she gained work experience in the graphic design industry and now co-runs Titanium Design with her husband Julian.

"We do graphics, branding, websites, illustrations, basically anything creative that people need in the visual form," Hindson, 45, says.

Last year telecommunications provider Chorus and the Beautification Trust teamed up to design eight cabinets in the region to be painted by local artists. One mural cabinet, on the Cook Street roundabout, was repainted by XiXi Lin after being damaged in a vehicle collision.

Another local Chorus box was painted by Pakuranga-based Laura Young on Pigeon Mountain Road in Howick.

Howick-based resident Hindson started painting the Chorus box on Union Road in mid-February and completed it in early March. The design, she says, is the Mangemangeroa Gorge.

"I love that place," she says. "I go walking there often. It's one of my favourite places."
